U.S. Transport Deaths Climb

Washington, May 14 (AP)-The U.S. transportation death toll rose nearly 4 percent last year, the biggest increase in five years. Highway fatalities lead the increase, up 3 percent to 46,880.

It was the second straight year of increased highway fatalities, after two years of decline.

Under the 55-mile-an-hour national speed limit, the highway death toll had dropped nearly 20 percent in 1974, and another 2 percent in 1975 before turning up by 2 percent in 1976 and 3 percent last year. The record for motor vehicle deaths was 55.511 in 1973. More than half the increase in highway intalities in 1977 resulted from motorcycle accidents. There were 4.067 motorcycle deaths, up 23 percent from the 1976 figure of 3.312.

Profiling the U.S. population, the bureau said that the labor force topped the 100 million mark for the first time last year with a gain of nearly 14.7 million workers in the period from 1970 to last year. Women accounted for 57 percent of that growth and now hold 41 million jobs.

In 1960, the bureau reported, 38 percent of all American women were employed while last year, 48 percent of the women had jobs. During the same period the proportion of men working dropped from 83 to 80 percent.

The ratio of males to females in the civilian labor force declined

The bureau said that the number of working wives continued to increase, rising from 40.5 percent in 1970 to 46.4 percent last year. Young women are delaying marriage and childbearing longer. About 43 percent of the women married in the 20-24 age group last year had not borne children, compared to 36 percent in 1970 and 24 percent in 1960.

The number of women in their early 20s who have not married went from 36 percent to 45 percent between 1970 and last year.

Based on interviews with some 53.000 households interviewed monthly, the report pulls together assorted population figures menuoned in earlier surveys: . An estimated 1.914,000 unmarried adults of the opposite sex were living together last year, an 83-percent in-crease since 1970.

 The marriage rate went up marginally from 9.9 per 1,000 in 1976 to 10.1 last year but was still

WASHINGTON, May 14-At 7:30 on a recent morning. Sen. James Allen, D-Ala., was visited at his Senate office by an unlikely pair of lobbyists — two striking furni-ture workers who were praising a bill to belp labor unions organize

As one of the Senate's most militant conservatives, Sen. Alleo might seem an unpromising target for such a sales pitch.

Yet be listeded politely as Ed Bolden and Wayne Scott of Dothan, Ala., told how they had won an organizing election at their plant only to be denied collectivebargaining oegotiations. As a consequence, they said, they had been on strike since July but the company continued to operate with strikebreakers.

(Another good reason to call home.) An international call is the next best thing to being there.

The Middle East is an important customer in construction equipment. Yet most of their suppliers still build the machines and the components they need halfway around the world.

Not Fiat-Allis. Lecce, Italy, Europe's newest and biggest construction machinery plant, is right at the doorstep of the Middle East. Whether you're shipping by air or by sea, whether you save hours or weeks - when time is money, that can make all the difference. That's why you'll find Fiat-Allis playing a major role on projects throughout the Middle East, all the way up to the very biggest jobs like the Port of Bandar Abbas in Iran or the Bakolori Dam in Nigeria. How did Fiat-Allis develop this kind of international approach? It helps to have the experience of two multi-national leaders like the eleven-billion dollar-a-year Fiat group and Allis-Chalmers. And to have the resources to back up a contractor wherever the job is.

If the Middle East is your place of business, you'll find a lot of good reasons to Think Twice. And think Fiat-Allis.

At Fiat-Allis, it's no coincidence that their biggest factory is only 750 kilometers from the Middle East.

MADRID, May 14 (NYT)— has been a jump forward. Before,

If the government and the parliament permit him, the genial Mr. Sevilla, 35, will oversee a genuine collection of income taxes, armed with a newly mohilized data bank and about 1,500 tax inspectors and another 1,000 hy next year.

Laws already on the books will permit inspectors, in special cases, to look at citizens' hank accounts and, after trial, send big-time tax dodgers to jail — unheard of in the Spain of Franco.

"Not Colombia"

"People think that the machinery we have works less well than it really does," said Mr. Sevilla. But he acknowledges that his countrymen be the most amhitious reform to have not in the past taken the tax man seriously. "This is not Colomdate hy Premier Adolfo Suarez's hia, but neither is it the United States. You know what I would like to see in Spain? The scenes you see in American movies where the guy, grabbed by the cop, says, Watch out, I'm a taxpayer.

That may take a while. Spain's first income-tax law went on the books in 1932 under the short-lived Second Republic, but the Franco regime collected only payroll, or withholding, taxes from salaried workers, while huge numbers of the middle and upper classes paid hardly any taxes at all and the very rich paid even less.

Now, by lowering the taxation rates to levels below those of the rest of Western Europe, Mr. Sevilla and his men hope to collect more revenue and make the tax burden fall more equitably across Spain's social spectrum.

"I think that most Spaniards have come around to the idea that they should pay taxes," said Mr. Ordonez, the treasury minister, who bas made tax reform the centerpiece of his labors.

Like many things the reformist government is doing, the income-tax law could boomerang against Mr. Suarez's middle-class electoral constituency. The average industrial worker will not be paying more taxes, but self-employed professionals and corporate executives will. Moreover, the very rich will still find themselves, by world standards, lightly taxed, with plen-ty of legal loopboles to reduce their

Under the government's proposals, a married couple with two children and an annual income of the equivalent of $25,000 a year will be taxed at a rate of 16 percent; a similar couple with an income of $62,500 will be taxed at a rate od 26 percent, but, at $125,000 the rate is only 39 percent.

Trenchant Criticism

Mr. Ordonez has been obliged to anticipate one of the most trenchant criticisms of the income tax:
"Where is our tax money going?"
asked a recent newspaper editorial. "In other European countries, there are high taxes, hut the highways, hospitals, housing and schooling, for example, are infinitely superi-

The treasury minister insists that a new law on the control of public expenditure will soon be passed, so that citizens can know where their tax money is going. The new taxes will probably not begin in bile until next year — when their political impact will start to be felt as well.

"There is no fiscal conscience in this country," said an adviser to Mr. Suarez. He added, bowever. People do have a kind of moral disposition to pay taxes. What they don't know yet is what kind of a trap they are about to fall into."

LONDON. May 14 (AP)-In a move to keep teen-agers off Brit-ain's swelling unemployment lines, Education Secretary Shirley Williams has proposed paying them as much as 10 pounds ($18.50) a week if they stay in school after they are 16 years old.

Government officials estimated that the plan could cost the govern-ment up to £200 million ($360 miltion) a year. But, they stressed, it could eliminate many of the welfare payments made to youngsters who quit school.

"We hope the scheme will per-suade about 60,000 youngsters to stay in education or start training in colleges," Mrs. Williams told a teachers conference Friday.

The growing number of teenag-ers who leave school at 16 and find no jobs available has alarmed the government. Latest statistics showed about 70,000 dropouts of work, with a big increase expected next month when the school year

Overdose Deaths Increasing

U.S. military police and U.S. drug enforcement agents praise the West German police and customs officials for their desire to fight the drug problem and have developed friendly, efficient plans for cooperation with them. When a White House-level drug expert came to visit Bonn recently, however, there was no ranking West German official to meet with him and to discuss the problem on a national basis.

associate the drug problem with the special status of West Berlin, sur-rounded by Communist East Ger-

In the view of most experts, the main entry point for hard drugs is East Berlin. It is used as a transit point hy thousands of Turkish workers who commute between Istanbul and their homes in West Berlin via East Berlin's Schoenfeld Airport. There are no competing nonstop flights from West Berlin's airport.

West Berlin officials complain that the Communists at Schoenfeld Airport do not inspect the luggage of the passengers coming from Tur-key in a transit status. Such travelers can easily enter West Berlin at several points which have traditionally been left free as part of West Berlin's reputation as an island of freedom. Between two cooperating countries such a problem would be handied by a joint police and customs watch at the overseas entry point. But the East German authorities will not allow West German authorities at Schoenfeld Airport. They maintain that West Germany cannot claim any authority over Berlin affairs,

The drug couriers, once in West Berlin, can easily travel farther west by air, train or auto. West Germany bas no customs or police control over travelers from Berlin. East German guards inspect trains and cars passing through their territory, hut mostly for persons fleeing to the West.

New Flow Reported

In their most recent analysis of the drug traffic, West German po-lice concluded that the flow has shifted from the former main sources in Southeast Asia to the Middle East.

The chief entry point for drugs into Western Europe traditionally was Amsterdam, where a Chinese criminal group dominated the trade. The Dutch city is still a ma-jor distribution point, but the raw materials may arrive from many directions. An international crack-jurisdiction among government down on the Amsterdam Iraffic, acagencies, the lack of a national cording to the police, caused a drug enforcement agency, inexperisor shortage of drugs, especially enced police and the special legal heroin, in Western Europe and encouraged the change in the supply

The experts believe that the raw opium, from which heroin is made, is now coming from fields in Pakistan, Afghanistan and Iran, While the couriers are mostly Turks, the Ankara government's program in balt illegal sales of its own onium apparently has been effective.

Why drug addiction among young West Germans seems higher than among other Europeans has not been explored.

The easy availability of the drugs from the new courier route may be one answer. The Hannover city prosecutor last month reported that heroin was selling there for the equivalent of $90 to $100 an ounce. one-half or one-third cheaper than in Amsterdam.

The high rate of unemployment among the young, common throughout Western Europe, the crowded nature of most universities and disillusionment with society are all cited by researchers.

In addition, West Germany's 10 state governments and West Berlin have been slow to educate young people about the dangers of drug abuse. The federal government has concentrated on the problems of alcoholism and obesity, also prevalent in West Germany.

Young people in West Germany also have access to prescription drugs of an addictive nature that are not sold in the United States. Many addicts have been found to start their habits on such drugs. U.S. military personnel have been led to addiction along the same path by young West German friends.

"We find that when young service members are moved to a location where drugs are cheap and readily available, where they are lonely and separated from the re-straints of their families, the conditions for drug abuse are present," the assistant defeose secretary for health, Vernon McKenzie, told a House of Representatives commit-international alphabet was introduced, causing different organizations to use different names for the same storms. To eliminate the confusion, U.S. agencies began using female names in 1953 and the practice has continued.

Irrigation in India Brings New Life to Parched Land

By William Borders

BIKANER, India (NYT)-Just a few years ago the soil of Pratap Singh's three-acre millet farm north of here was gray and gritty and his crop was scrawny in the best seasons. Now, irrigated by the Ra-jasthan Canal, which is being cut for 400 miles across northwestern India, the little plot is fertile, almost lush, and its yield has more than doubled.

"The water coming in has made all the difference," Mr. Singh said as be surveyed the fields around him, where until recently the land was almost desert. "That canal has changed the whole face of our village, like a miracle."

The $400-million irrigation network has changed the face of hun-dreds of villages in the 20 years since it started, bringing new life to vast tracts. One of the country's major engineering projects, it re-flects the vital role of irrigation in agricultural development and the mportance of water management in a hot, parebed tand.

Rain in most parts of India is concentrated in the monsoon from June to September.

Low Yields

The lack of moisture at other times is a principal reason for low average yields — 1,000 pounds of rice an acre in India compared with 3,000 pounds in the United States, for example, or 20 bushels of wheat United States. It is also a reason that only 20 percent of agricultural crop a year, despite the long growing season.

Since India is the world's second most populous country, with 630 million and more than a million added every month, food production is its main task.

When we are finished here this land will produce 3 million more tons of food grains than it did when we started, a very exciting prospect," said A. S. Kapoor, a civil engineer who supervises the Rajasthan Canal project from a map- under U.S. regulations.

According to Mr. Kapeor, sup-porters of the canal are also en-couraged by what they see as an increasing government commitment to irrigation. Forty million acres of farmland are to be irrigated in the next five years, and the amount spent this year on large projects is to be 13 percent above that of last

Like most construction in India, the Rajasthan Canal could be com-

In the slack agricultural seasons, as many as 50,000 people work on the canal, driving $.000 camels in the 200-foot-wide excavation, hauling the dirt and sand or making bricks to line the main waterway. After the canal is finished - in the 1980s, according to the present schedule - many of the laborers are expected to stay to work on farms that have become productive. In some areas where the canal has been completed, population density has increased to square mile from 15, incidentally helping to reduce the pressures on tess productive land.

Terrorism and Overreaction

One hardly need be Italian for the ordeal of Aldo Moro to leave a lasting impression on the heart; nor be paranoid to wonder about its impression on the mind - about terror spreading to other free societies.

To people in the U.S., that is, in a sense, an ingenuous concern. We forget bow checkered our own history is with terrorism — the Molly Maguires, Haymarket, Ku Klux Klan, let alone such recent manifestations as the Weather Underground, the Symhionese Liberation Army and the FALN of Puerto Rico. That we have experienced and survived terror in our past offers no consolation to anyone, but history does offer a lesson: We need to guard against terror; hut we need to guard, with equal diligence, against overreacting to it.

There are few generalizations about terrorism that scholars seem agreed on. But there is one: that the aim of many terrorists is precisely to incite governments to repression, to crack down hard, provoking more unrest - and more repression. As Brian Jenkins of the Rand Corporation has observed, "The government may thus be induced by the terrorists to self-destruct."

There is little danger of that now in the United States. The country has lately learned that surveillance of potential public enemies can lead to surveillance of private political enemies; that the search for radical bombers, unchecked leads to the establishment of White House "plumbers." Indeed, the government is now embarked on the difficult task of providing federal intelligence and law enforcement agencies with clear rules of law for operations.

In the name of controlling terrorism, however, there is some muttering about these efforts. There is a feeling among some officials that they are being subjected to a kind of no-win restraint. If they monitor a marginally suspicious group, they risk criticism for bending or hreaking the rules. If they do not conduct surveillance and the group erupts into criminal action, they risk criticism for incompetence.

Such feelings may be understandable. How defensible they are depends on just how much inhibition the new rules in fact impose. A typical rule involves wiretapping and hugging. In the past, if investigators wished to conduct electronic surveillance of a suspect domestic group, they needed little more authority than their suspicions. Now, under court decisions and executive guidelines, they must obtain a warrant - which means possessing at least some evidence of criminal intent, which is not always present. It is thus conceivable that a potentially troublesome group might escape surveillance for a time; but innocent groups are protected against potentially malign official spying.

In short, a slight risk is offset by a considerable protection for political freedom. The balance does not seem hard to strike, at least in the United States, but it may be harder in societies that feel themselves more vulnera-

Freedom alone, as we have seen, is no protection against terrorists; on the contrary, the only states safe from them are totalitarian. But those who are tempted to overreact to terror risk, in effect, kidnapping their own freedoms, for with repression we end up terrorizing ourselves.

Africa: Sanctioning Some Intervention

By Stephen S. Rosenfeld

WASHINGTON—It is a sobering sequel to the Indochina war, which supposedly discredited toreign military intervention generally, that in one part of the world, black Africa — which once seemed more insistently opposed to the practice than any other — foreign intervention has become almost routine.

Many people will recall, for instance, Africa's trembling rage at the spectacle of U.S. paratroopers dropping into the Congo (oow Zaire) in 1965 to rescue threatened white missionaries. Post-independence African vulnerability and bumiliadon had never seemed so

Yet it turns out that Africans are not so much opposed to interven-don in principle as in specific cases of it. Moral pretensions and resolu-tions of the Organization of African Unity notwithstanding, they are ready to employ or sanction that opoon selectively when it suits their purposes. They are, in brief, no less pragmatic and no more self-denying than other people.

To Nigeria, President Carter said,

"We share with you a commitment to an Africa ... free from military interference by outside nations. He warned that intervention aggra-vates local disputes and "opens the door to a new form of domination or colonialism." But his hosts let him know that Soviet-Cuban internim know that Soviet-Cuban inter-vention on the Angolan or Ethiopi-an or, prospectively, the Rhodesian model was fine by them, as it is to many other Africans. Not for them to agree that Africans should settle

Lack of Resources

Africans lack the collective political resources - a strong and inclusive regional organization, a confirmed habit of consultation — they would need to soften the barsh tribal and racial conflets whose festering invites increased whose festering invites increased increased armong black African sates, perhaps only giant Nigera, with a well-trained-and-financed army still near its swollen civi-war size, can protect its territoria integrity and otherwise serve its minonal in-terests in a crisis withouthaving either to call upon externs forces or to tremble lest enemies de.

Nigeria, however, has not been able to translate that power into diplomatic mediating capacity, as it tried to do in the Horn or so far into leverage in southern Africa. To do that it might have to demonstrate the capacity to intrivene and the very demonstration, by an African state, could rouse the fears of many other African staes. Their preferred alternative: Cinans and

Few people familiar wth devel-opment needs and the poclivities of many African elites would casually urge Africans to beet up their military establishments. Its unhappily true, however, that amost all the other Africans have armed forces too small or too weak to cope by themselves with ne kinds of challenges and ambiions to which the continent seems increasingly prone

Interventions:

This is the basic condition in which interventions have been conducted in the last few years: by other Africans (in Ethiopia, Zaire), by minority white regimes (in Angola, Mozambique, Zambia), by Russians and Cubans (in Angola, Ethiopia) and by the French (in Muritania, Chad, Djibeuti). I put the United States, which apparently only assisted from eff-stage in Angola, in a separate category. Guerrillas, who aren't exactly out-siders, go in their own caegory. The French deserve 1 separate word. That they have nanaged to be militarily useful in Africa for so long without suffering my serious rebuke as "neocolonialist" is a tribute to their deft diplomary and to the fact that they generally rein-force a satisfactory if corservative status quo. One wishes they could extend their services to countries, mostly in west Africa, though that might not win the same support at bome. One also wishes hat the British - with the oew of money - could quietly work backinto the similarly handy gendarme ole they played in their former eastAfrican colonies before they retind from ramparts "east of Suez."

People in the U.S. fnt most about southern Africa, where the general expectation that the United States will not intervene both underlies and undercuts the atempts of U.S. diplomacy to irrange peaceable transactions. In region where everybody and his uicle are prepared to send troops across naulonal frootiers, the United States

Fortunately, intervention it Africa, though it sends geop-liucal chills, is not for the United States the most important problem o the world. It's not oearly as important, for instance, as the Middle Est or inflation or energy. Anyway it's not something the United States needs to worry more about than the run of Africans do.

Sino-Soviet Border Incidents

The new Sino-Soviet border incident, the first one publicized in nine years, appears to have been small, not to say curious. A Soviet patrol, pursuing, Moscow says with a straight face, an "armed criminal" pushed a few miles into Chinese territory and evidently roughed up some Chinese. Peking denounced the incursion as "serious" and "grave," But border talks, suspended for 14 months, were at once conspicuously resumed.

Given the continuing bad blood between the two Communist giants and their importance in the whole geopolitical scheme, the most trivial incident along the world's most hostile and heavily armed border is politically riveting. Was the Soviet crossing a local accident, an operation staged to focus Peking's attention on the border talks, a calculated act of general intimidation? Was Peking's bristling response itself a provocation, an action to focus Moscow's attention on the border talks, a reminder to the United States - on the eve of White House adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski's trip to Peking — that the Soviet Union is too treacherous to engage in detente?

For the moment, we'll pass. We note, though, the central issue raised. The U.S. has an immense interest in seeing that the Soviet Union and China remain rivals of each other. rather than partners in a common rivalry against the United States. Even with its antagonism for China, the Soviet Union in particular has plenty of distrust left for the United States: China has considerably less. But without their mutual antagonism, both Communist powers might become substantially more troublesome to Washington and less inclined to cooperate across the board. It was precisely to give China a stake in a relationship with the United States, and thereby to give the Soviet Union pause, that Richard Nixon went to Peking.

Mao Tse-tung's personal hatred of Soviet ideology alone ensured Sino-Soviet hostility: there were, of course, many other factors. His death in September, 1976, and his successor's change of emphasis from internal revolution to industrial modernization raised sharply the question of whether a certain reconciliation might follow. It hasn't yet, but who's to say it won't? The border incident suggests one possibility, the quick patchup another.

Given the uncertainty, many people have wondered if the United States should cement its relationship with Peking before China is "lost" again. In this spirit, the movement for "normalization." by ending diplomatic and defense ties to Taiwan, has been pressed. But neither conservatives eager to keep Peking in the line against Moscow nor liberals anxious for normalization for its own sake have found generally acceptable the act and symbolism of backing off from Taiwan. This has led U.S. policy to seek ways short of normalization to show respect and friendship for China — the Brzezinski visit, for example. Policymakers realize, too, that China appreciates every U.S. show of strength and will, even as it laments what it regards as regular U.S. shortfalls in the strength and will department.

The best U.S. policy is to continue to strengthen the Moscow connection and the Peking connection. This was the Nixon-Kissinger-Ford policy, and it is essentially the Carter policy. Trouble on the Sino-Soviet border merely underscores the U.S. need to pursue deeper relations on both sides.

NEW YORK—I never thought much about my allegiances. My parents were for Frankin Roo-sevelt and against the spoilage of our land by senseless land speculators or industrial giants who put sicel mills where there had been sand dunes and the prairie warbler had oested. People who went oo bird trips or camped in the national forests and wanted to save Mineral

King were the right sort, while those who owned big yachts or stripped the rolling fields of Ohio for coal were the bad guys whom we must get laws to stop. So it was natural to make out a modest check whenever Robert Redford or some equally fine fellow asked you to help him defend the environment and fight the polluters who would give us more cancer

Now, bowever, I must confess that I dido't respond to Robert Redford's latest appeal. It is not blinders, and can our self-interest that I am against him as a folk as scientists oot allow us to see how hero, but, though he must be unaware, he and I are, for practical purposes, real enemies. For some of the money he raises for the Environmental Defense Fund is being used to try to stop the experiments we do with "recombinant DNA."

This test-tube-made geneue material now provides an incredibly powerful means to find out what uman genes are like. And in so doing it will give us important new ways to think, say, about our immune system, or how our blood cells are made or the nature of the genes that go out of control when cancer arises.

Friend of DNA

This being so. I most certainly am a Friend of DNA and want work with recombinant DNA to go as fast as possible. In the old days, this impulse would generally be viewed as good for the earth. Now, bowever, there exist highly vocal groups who think I'm a danger to the world. The Friends of the Earth, the Sierra Club and the Natural Resource Defense Council, as well as the Environmental Defense Fund, all say that our experiments pose a realistic threat to our way of life and must be constrained by their new breed of environmental

All this initially surprised me, since I had always regarded environmentalists as among our most intelligent public groups and thought that the original rules for work with recombinant DNA which had come out of the 1975 Asilomar Conference should more than reassure them. Particularly sioce I found those guidelines a terrible overkill and probably not at all necessary

My fellow DNA workers wanted. however, 10 act more than clean and certainly to give the impression being responsible citizens. So they suggested that we largely work with specifically enfeebled organisms that would not live well out side our test tubes. And when after Asilomar, the matter was taken up by the National Institutes of Health, they in turn wanted to look like the perfect guardian of our health and so the guidelines which we now have to live with became more than tough, in fact, they ef-tectively blocked most of the better experiments that directly relate to of the British empire.

Harsh Rules

As a result, the DNA community is now very unhappy working un-der harsh rules we do not believe necessary and which waste vast funds. We now want to relax great-ly the guidelines we imposed upon to be much more complicated than known) before attending a Grid-their original drafting. Our main problem is that in our original statements about recombinant DNA, we kept referring to "poten-tial dangers." Instead we should have said "conjectural dangers," since there was, and still is, not a trace of evidence that any of the experiments pose a threat to those who do them, much less to the general public. We never expected that we would be hranded as polluters by the environmental movement. For uotil recombinant DNA came along, we always thought we were oo their side.

After all, who wants to see our planet out fit for our children to inherit? When they went to court to block DDT or keep the skies of Monument Valley blue, we could only applaud. So why now are we on opposite sides? Can we have oo blinders, and can our self-interest indifferent we are to the harm we may do? Might, in fact, the professional environmentalists present arguments that we just can't face up

I feel stroogly this is not the case. Compared to almost any other object which starts with the letter D, DNA is very safe indeed. Far better to worry about daggers, or dyna-mite, or dogs, or dieldrin, or dioxin or drunken drivers, than to draw up Rube Goldberg schemes on how laboratory-made DNA will lead to the extinction of the human The strains of viruses and cells

we work with io the laboratory generally are not pathogenic for man, and all we know about infectious diseases makes it unlikely that the addition of a little foreign DNA will create any danger for those who work with recombinant DNAbearing bacteria. Even if no special guidelines existed, and we only employed the standard microbiologi-cal practices of routine sterilization, we should have no reason to be concerned for our health. Equally important, we should not worry that our experiments will profoundly alter evolution by creating bi-zarre life forms unlike any seen

If this is so, how can we explain the enthusiasm with which so many professional environmentalists wish to shut us down?

groups thrive on bad news, and, the more the public worries about the environment, the more likely we are to keep providing them with the funds that they need to keep their. organizations growing. For the short term this may give them more recruits, but I worry about the long-term effect. No one

The answer, I fear, is that such will benefit if we perceive the credibility of our environmental movements to be oo better than that of the most troglodytic of our inclustrial firms.

If what they say about DNA is nonsense, do we have any compelling reason to listen to them when they come out against pesticides that give us shiny apples or tell us that the waters of the Mississippi are likely to give us cancer? I would like someone to set me right oo such matters, but whom to trust now is oot that clear.

Excusing Crime

I lived in the Spain of the early 50s and the Ireland of the early 60s and saw poverty and the virtual absence of crime

Yet today thanks to the fact that it is a "liberal" bromide that poverty breeds crime or, to put it the other way, that crime can be ex-plained by poverty, journalists and presidents have the same knee-jerk response to crime. (I put the word "liberal" in quotes because I always felt the word meant freedom from established doctrine and today no one is more a prisoner of the doctrinaire than the avowed liberal.)

In the Tribune of May 6-7, we find a report of gang violence in Glasgow along with the usual key words: squalor, slums, unemployment, recession, social ills. Similarly, President Carter in denouncing the legal profession said: "I have inspected many prisons and I know that nearly all inmates are drawn from the ranks of the powerless and the poor."

ti is my opinion that beliefs like these - either subliminal, as in the case of Ed Blanche, author of the article on the terrorization of Glasgow by gangs or overt, as in the case of President Carter — have a tendency to excuse crime as socially produced thus relieving individu-als of responsibility for their acts. And individual responsibility for behavior is at the very foundation of our system of law and order.

In defense of Mr. Blanche, who wrote a very interesting report, there was, along with the usual poventy-slam theme, a hint of a more fundamental explanation of Glasgow's crime. He wrote: "The tradition of violence, fueled by the Scots' reputation as hard drinkers bas run through life in Glasgow for the last 100 years and once earned." the tast 100 years and once earned the port city the ritle of the cancer K.H.HECHT.

This series was a searing ad hominem attack on various members of the U.S. Senate using adjectives outside the realm of objective reporting. Roosevelt suppos-edly complained that Phillips had gone too far in attacking "poor old Chauncey Depew," the aged sena-tor from New York whom Phillips ridiculed as senile.

As Mr. Roberts points out, Roosevelt, though constrained to ob-serve political protocol, consistent-ly championed the causes of the muckrakers. Perhaps not sufficiently emphasized was the fact that muckraking essentially was a product of the popular magazines rather than the less distinguished daily press of the period.

Willy Brandt Views the Shape of Europe, Eurocommunism

Wold Socialist Leader Examines Power Balance

By Jonathan Power

Is Willy Brat, the former chancellor of West Germany, a prophet unrecognized in hism land? For the rest of the world, Mr. Brandt is a man of heroic measureho battled and triumphed ogainst one adversity after anothheroic measures values and intemprice ognins one daversity after anom-er—his illegisacy, Nazism, the Eastern enemy of the gate of his adopted city, Berlin, arthe division of Europe. The last, known more popularly as Ostpolitik, wase reason for his Nobel Peace Prize. It also explains why of Ostpolitik, was reason for his Nobel Peace Prize. It also explains why of all the postwar liticians in Europe he is one of the handful most likely to go into the history oks. This image of the "good German" is still the powerful one. Even the eus surrounding his resignation only mildly tarnish it. This is why he was impresident of the Socialist International, why he was invited to set up a spal commission to investigate the crisis in the relationship between the Wern world and the Third World and why his expected entry between the Wern world and the Intra world and why his expected entry into the Europe Parliament in the elections next year is anxiously awaited.

But this is a the view of Mr. Brandt in Germany. There he is widely regarded as on who has shot his bolt, who has lost the will to fight the

I found Mr. fundt the opposite of what German friends had led me to expect: alert, entive and prepared to talk at length. The reserve, even aloofness, of what I had been warned, was certainly there. But his ideas are precise—and relevant as they always have been. Germany needs more of with Rounds alless.

Jonathan Por — Could we talk about Eurammunism? In your first speech as airman of the Socialist Internatial in November, 1976, you sailou were not sure whether the alian Communist party's talk of istoric compromise was a matter factics in the interests of power of development based on insight. Deou have a clearer idea today?

Willy Bran — Maybe. Maybe. The doubts expressed then f would now chect more with the would now cheet more with the French Commist party than the stalian Commist party. Still with the stalians, ry've moved a good deal. They'vest Stalinism behind them. Hower, they've not lest Leninism beld them. But Carrillo, the Spart Communist party leader, says shas. If his followers have as well don't know. The have as well don't know. The question of minism is of course mportant beuse I find it very difficult to unstand how a party can find its oper place within a democratic st-up if it follows Lenin's idealis ideas on the role of the partind the development of the powistructure. My feeling is that as theears go on there may be a chancer a nondogmatic left-ist Socialisted to be the primary influence with the Italian Com-munist par. And then one would ask the deston why they call themselves communists. Why not Socialists of Social Democrats? I should add that the problem is not, as some British fear, that a federal state would be created which sooner or later would compel the national states and national cultures to disappear. New York Stock Market

NEW YORK, May 14 INYT -Stock prices rose late last week - amid udings that, in years past, would have been bad news for Wall Street. On Thursday, for example, the Federal Reserve raised its discount rate to 7 percent from 6'2 percent, but the Dow Jones industrials barreled ahead, gaining a dozen points.

Then on Friday, the market got its first chance to react to a bulging $4billion increase in the nation's money supply — and before noon the Dow was ahead another 7 points. For the full week, the industrial average gained 11.61 points to finish at 840.70, which puts the Dow in the plus column for 1978.

The discount rate is the rate at which the Fed lends out money to its member banks. For several weeks the increase in the discount rate was expected as a move to bring it into line with other short-term rates. But here was a confirmation of recent credit-tightening moves by the Fed and. on top of that, a money-supply increase that might usher in even tighter credit conditions this spring. So why did the stock market go up? The explanation on Wall Street is that this time around, investors are betting that the tightening of rates now, while business activity is still rebounding can crimp the money-supply growth sufficiently to forestall galloping inflation several years hence.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange amounted to 182 million shares, compared with 196.22 million shares in the previous week. This is the kind of turnover that brings smiles to the faces of stockbrokers, as it virtually assures profits for their firms. Watching the markets from his home base in Denver, Bjorn K, Borgen, president of the management company for the Founders Group of mutual funds, sees a peak in interest rates by mid-summer or late summer. Borgen believes that the stock market will undergo a test during the next several months in reponse to rising rates (and some rising apprehension on the part of investors). But we think the Dow has seen its low at the 742 level reached at the end of February," he says. "Looking out over the next 12 months, we feel comfortable that equity prices will move up. Moreover, foreign buyers and institutional investors should return to the equity market this going into Florida real estate — political, economic or investment utive year also has lured more real-land, condominiums, commercial opportunities are not perceived as ty investment and tourists to Flority investment and tourists to Florida, New Orleans and some other parts of the South. And Atlanta has become the nation's second-largest convention center, according to business leaders here.

The growth of the South." Mr Ratajezak said, is related to the growth in Florida. Retirees going there created a market and that, in turn, anracted new plants to the South. It was the creation, first, of a hig

Southern market and then the labor, tax, utility, transportation and other advantages that induced France's Michelin Tire Co. to pur plants in South Carolina in 1973 and now in Alabama, according to Richard Bennion, vice-president of the company's manufacturing divi-

Michelin and others also cite such attractions as weather and help from political leaders in coping with environmental regulations. At a time when the national unemployment level is down to around 6 percent, johlessness in several of the Southern states is even lower. In Fehruary, it was 5.5 percent in Tennessee and Georgia. and 5.9 percent in Alabama. The figures then were 6.1 percent for Florida, 6.8 for Mississippi and 7.1 for Louisiana - hut all the levels probably have come down since

Hard to Get

"We are hearing more and more lately." Mr. Brandt said, "that if someone wants work down here, he can get a joh. Even construction workers seem to be getting scarce again. Skilled workers are hard to

Our name may imply we're Belgian, but our network says we're international. It says we have the ability to service clients not just through 1060 branches in Belgium, but also through our subsidiaries, affiliated and associated banks. As well as through representative offices in major business centers, stretching from Rio to Tokyo. Why we sometimes open our ears instead of another office. We think that sometimes it can be just as efficient to rely on our local correspondents. We also have other ears at work for you through our membership in SFE and Associated Banks of Europe (ABECOR).

This is what gives us the local touch around the world. So we can give you the insider's edge wherever you do business.

Annual Shareholders Meeting BANCO HISPANO AMERICANO

(Held in Madrid on 2nd April, 1978)

Excerpts from the speech of Mr. Luis de Usera, President:

"We must endeavour to encourage entrepeneurial initiative for the entrepeneur is the true protagonist in a market economy. The profit concept should be reinstated, as besides being a legitimate aspiration it is also indispensable for the functioning of a free economy. We emphasize that it is necessary to rectify the limitations that keep the banking dividends out of proportion with the real value of capital and reserves.

In accordance with the policy established by the Board of Directors, a youthful and enthusiastic new executive team will ensure the efficient management of the Bank for many years to come."

Excerpts from the speech of Mr. Alejandro Albert, Chief General Manager:

"All through the year Banco Hispano Americano has placed great emphasis in successfully fulfilling the guidelines set forth by the monetary authorities.

The growth of typical banking investments, above the already high rate of increase in deposits, gives an idea of the great effort undertaken in order to satisfy client demand, support economic activity and maintain the employment level.

Banco Hispano Americano is present in the most important financial centres in the world and has an ever growing international clientele."

Deposition

As a consequence of the Bank's normal growth, as well as niergers undertaken during 1977, both poseta and foreign currency deposits increased by 1111,881 million posetas, namely 26.9% over the previous year, enabling the Bank to improve the previous year, enabling the Bank to improve the previous year, enabling the bank to improve the party partition of the total deposits. prive its participation of the foral depo-sits held by the Spanish bank. When you consider that more than half of the biggest U.S. industrials do business with Marine Midland, you get a good picture of how big we are.

In fact, our deposits total $10.2 billion, with $2.3 billion in personal savings. We've got $638 million in capital and reserves, and assets totaling $12.1 billion. As much as these numbers tell you, they don't say we've been a major money center bank for many years. Which means we've got enough experience in foreign exchange and foreign currency management to loans. And manage major international credits. We can also assist in generating funds in other capital markets, through our associates.

Of course, Marine Midland has the facilities to carry this out. With our base of international operations in New York City's financial district, we have 300 branches throughout the state, and key people in 22 of the world's major financial centers. Some people may not expect all this from us. But after all, Marine Midland is the 12th largest bank in the United States.

Rising Income

Meanwhile, per-capita income has risen sharply in the South in four decades. It stood at only 59 percent of the United States average in 1940 but had risen to 81 percent by 1970 and now is at about 85 percent.

The fastest-growing industries in the South are those engaged in the manufacture of durable goods, mainly in home appliances and metal fabricating, and some electronics operations. Mr. Ratajczak said that no more than 2 percent of the new plants being established in the South represent shutdowns of facilities in other parts of the country. Rather, they come from expansions by of Switzerland as an international financial center. In general, the bankers said business was adversely affected by appreciation of the franc, higher taxes on securities transactions and greater competitinn from foreign institutions. Rainer Gut, general manager of Credit Suisse, said that Switzerland currently places 30-10-40 percent of the new Eurobond issues, whereas in the past it used to place more than half. He said the decline was mainly due to increased foreign competition.

Hans Baer, managing director of Julius Baer, said that "Switzerland is feeling pressures of foreign compedition as far as the fee structure is concerned." Foreign Players Boost Spain's Defensive Edge MADRID. (UPI)—Qualifying for the World Cup meant more to Spanish players than the 25 million pesetas ($305,000) in bonuses it brought to the 33-man squad.

It proved that Spanish soccer could compete, with the help of fareign players. Foreign players flooded Spain again this season and Dutch star Johan Cruyff, whose latest $700,000 contract with Barcelona runs out at the end of the season, was nne nf the 139 foreigners sprinkled among the top 34 league clubs.

foreign-born players each, getting around the official two-foreigner lix at by using "quickie" Spanish nationalizations. Most of the imports come from South America — Argentina leads the influx with 60, followed by Paraguay (29), Uruguay (19), and Brazil (8), Argentina-born Ruben Cano will be carrying much of Spain' hope for success in Argentina. The 26-year-old forward, who scored two of Spain's four Warld Cup qualifying goals, explained: "I was born in San Rafael, Argentina, hut my father registered me at the Spanish consulate. Over there they consider me Argentinian and here they consider me Spanish."

Coach's Support

Cann has been criticized in some quarters for squandering chances, but he has a great champion in Ladislao Kubala, Spain's Hungarian-born team chief. Kubala, a former striker who played for Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Spain, said: "There are players who miss a lot of goals, but it is because they are right in there. They move in and out to find the right spot. There are players that in a whole season have had 10 or 12 chances and have made good two or three. If someone has had 50 chances and made good 20, well that's 20 goals."

Cano scored the only goal against Yugoslavia 10 win Spain's place in Spain will not be changing its style overnight and will base its World Cup challenge on defensive strength, relying on the opportunism of Cano, Juan Manuel Asesi and Juan Gomez. Gomez, a speedy winger, has been criticized for being too selfish, but Kubala has great faith in the 23-year-old forward, saying: "His faults are

The Twenty-Ninth Day By Lester R. Brown. W.W. Norton. 363 pp. $11.95

Reviewed by Deborah Ward

TO TEACH schoolchildren ex-I ponential growth, the French use an example about a lily pond. It asks if a lily pood that contains a single leaf which doubles each day is full on the 30th day, when is it half full?

The answer is the 29th day. Our global lily pood of 4 hillion people may be at that stage, at least half full, and within the next generatioo it could fill up entirely. At least that is the opinion of Lester R. Brown, director of the Worldwatch Institute, in his latest book, "The Twenty-Ninth Day." Brown says that already occasional clusters of lily leaves are crowding the edges, signaling the day wheo the pood will reach its limit. What Brown worries about is that we may miss or misread these signals and fail to adjust our lifestyles and babits in the time avail-

Coping and adjustments oeed to take place now and Brown offers some suggestions about coping-a oew ethic he feels must replace the prevailing growth ethic.

The means to adjusting human oeeds and oumbers to the earth's oatural capacities include, for example, stabilizing world population, developing renewable energy resources such as solar power, increasing recycling efforts, encouraging rural reform and concentrating on long-term planning. Even the creation of an office like Sweden's Office of Future Studies would not hurt. Brown is disturbed about the way the experts are analyzing the future. He points out that ecologi-cal and economic experts have been unable to predict such problems as the energy crisis, food shortages, double-digit global inflation, the collapse of major fisheries, the high climb in world wheat prices and the global ecocomic slump.

With such grim problems, is there any hope of ever coping with our resources? Brown feels there is hope, hut wooders about how much time it will take before people realize we have to change from a growing to a coping world. To increase our awareness, he lists four areas where population growth is overtaxing the earth's capacity: ocean fisheries, forests, grasslands and croplands. The pressure of expanding human demands on these four systems has reached the point where it is seriously impairing their productive capacities.

For example, the world fish catch per person peaked in 1970 and has declined steadily since then. Brown reports that "the productivity of scores of ocean fisheries is falling as the catch exceeds their regenerative capacity. In a protein-hungry world, overfishing has become the rule, oot the exception," he writes.

Forests are in worse shape.

Brown continues. Sioce they are one of our most valuable economic resources, forests are the most heavily exploited. Most of the Mid-die East and North Africa, as well as parts of Asia, Ceotral America and South America are now virtually treeless due to excessive de-mands for fuel-wood and bousing.

Deforestatioo threatens all ecological systems and undermines the fertility and stahility of soils, Brown adds. In India, the soil's shility to absorh and hold water has diminished and flooding has become more frequent and severe.

Grasslands, a source of protein. leather, fiber and energy, are steadily deteriorating as livestock num-bers increase. Overgrazing, although oot new, is becoming more commooplace and it adversely affects food production, livestock products and raw materials produc-tion. A Bureau of Land Management study found that only half the grasslands in the United States are in fair coodition, 28 per cent are in poor coodition and 5 per cent are io bad condition, primarily because of overgrazing.

Croplands also are fast becoming useless as a result of over-plowing, Land hunger is driving millions of farmers ooto soils of marginal quality. Even marginal quality farming is failing because of populatioo pressure and a lack of time to declop marginal farming techniques.

The scale and speed with which fisheries, forests, grasslands and croplands are being impaired needs attention oow, Brown emphasizes. After all, the relationship between these resources and the world's population affects "what we eat, how much we pay for housing and how many children we have," to mention a few areas Brown believes are bound to change dramatically within the next two decades. Overall, Brown urges us to "reckon in advance" with the prospect of a thirtieth day. How we handle a full lily pond depends on our exp-

Many players wrongly think of the end game exclusively as the phase in which advantages obtained earlier are made to yeild a victory by good technique. Yet there are endings produced by the exchange of queens and perhaps another set of pieces that ought to be regarded as, and played like, queenless middle games.

To the game between Grandmasters I sign Portice of Hungary and ters Lajos Portisch of Hungary and Anthony Miles of England from the fifth round of the Louis D. Statham International Tournament in Lone Pine, Calif., the main struggle took place after the queens were exchanged. Moreover, the opening system used by Portisch

The idea behind the 10 ... B-N5 is to restrain the white center until Black is ready to challenge it by 9 ... P-K4. Joe Louis

Joe Louis, the Gentleman Champion, Marks His 64th Round

NEW YORK, May 14 (NYT)—Joe Louis passed his 64th birthday yesterday in a wheelchair in Las Vegas. The old champion has been in poor health and low spirits lately but he is coming out it. Twice this week he rode the wheelchair out to lunch, once at his golf club, once at Caesar's Palace, He has, in short, been down but not Archduke Francis Ferdinand, the heir to the Austrian throne whose assassination would ignite World War I, had six weeks to live when Joe Louis Barrow, seventh of Munroe and Lillie Barrow's eight children, was born in an unpainted shack beside the dirt road from Lafayette to Cusseta in Chambers County, Ala. It was 1914, the year the first ship sailed through the Panama Canal. That season Casey Stengel would bat .316 for the Brooklyn Dodgers and Ty Cobb would win his eighth of nine straight batting championships in the American League. Jack Johnson, the heavyweight champion of the world, was wearing a beret, playing the horses and drinking champagne through a straw in exile in Paris.

May 13 was a Wednesday, but in later years Joe spoke as though it were Friday the 13th. "Do you have any superstitions?" Harry Markson of Madison Square Garden asked when Joe was champion, "Don't need superstitions," Joe said. "I was born on the 13th, that's enough."

Nobody will ever know whether Joe Louis was or was not the greatest fighter who every lived, and it doesn't matter. He was and is one of the greatest gentlemen and one of the most honest.

"You really think you could whupped me?" Muhammad Ali asked on television a dozen years ago. Ali was in the second year of his championship and the two were appearing together to announce that he had retained Louis as "adviser."

"When I was champion." Joe told his new employer. "I went on what they called a Bum-of-the-Month tour.

Ali's voice rose to a squeak, "You mean I'm a bum?" "You woulda been on the tour," Joe said.

That association lasted a week or so before Joe and his wife, Martha, called a press conference to announce that he had no connection with the Black Muslims. They were never meant for each other. Muhammad and Joe. Ali has his own way of going and it isn't Joe's.

Quiet dignity has always marked Joe's way. A story Harry Markson used to tell, which is confirmed by Barney Nagler in his biography of Louis, suggests that the dignity was instinctive. It goes back to Joe's first appearance in New York when he was a shy kid, inexperienced in public relations and almost wordless. At Doc Bier's training camp in Pompton Lakes, N.J., news photographers wanted to pose him eating a big wedge of watermelon. (It seems incredible that they thought in such threadbare stereotypes as late as 1935, but they did).

Joe refused. "I don't like watermelon," he said.
"The point is." Markson said, telling the tale, "Joe loves watermelon." Joe has never been publicly milliont in racial matters because that is not his way. but Nagler's bouk relates incidents of race prejudice Joe encountered in the Army during World War II and tells how he went directly and boldly to the top when that happened. Simple dignity got results. Dignity and pride.

Mention of dignity and pride should not imply that there is anything stuffy about him or that he lacks humor. During the war, John Carmichael of Chicago asked Billy Conn, who touted Army camps with Joe, whether the two had ever talked about their first bout, in which Conn was leading on points until Joe knocked him out in the 13th

"We were taking a walk," Billy said, "and I said, 'Gee, Joe, you're a lucky guy. If I hadn't got careless back there in the 13th, you'd be an ex-champ and I'd have held the title these last three years."

"What did Joe say to that?" Carmichael asked, "He said, 'Hub, you talking about holdin' the title three years, you couldn't hold it

"I always knew," Joe said one day, "that if I kept on fighting, somebody would come along and take my title. But not this guy, not tonight."

PRAGUE, May 14 (IHT)—Curt Bennett is 30 years in who old and soon, probably in two years, he will have to go in who out into the world and find a job. He thinks about this a lot with a heavy heart.

Not that he is imemployable. He is a college graduate who for the last few years has been earning at least $100,000 annually. But his degree is in Russian studies and his employer for the last seven years has been the cither the St. Louis Blues or the Atlanta Flames of the last ENational Hockey League.

Although be said that he would probably major in Russian and play in the NHL if he had it to do all named over again, Bennett believes that be lacks practical experience to carry him when be is through with bockity. While thinking about his problem. Bennett said, he "I realized that it was common.

"I realized that it wasn't only me who had no guidance," he said. "Most of the players in the NHL needed advice." So, as player representative for the Blues, he is pushing a plan to have the Players Association, their union, work with businessmen in each NHL city to set up vocational guidance programs. In an interview at the world hockey championships

Search for Loneliness

NEW YORK-Greta Garbo wanted to be alone, but most people didn't. They thought it exotic. That one of the great beauties of the age should choose loneliness when all humanity was available for her companionship seemed spooky and prohably added to Garbo's allure by suggesting a dark preference in tastes that was utterly alien to the American zest for human commo-

This was in time past, in the 1930s and 1940s. when Sweden and solitude were still as remote as Cambodia and sheriffs campaigning for the homosexual vote. In time present, loneliness seems to be the aspiration of depressingly large numbers of Americans. Looking at the growing numbers of persons proclaiming happiness from the solitude of private hurrows, you wonder whether we are becoming a race who are simply afraid of people or whether we are finding such joy in self-love that it can only be spoiled by hunum contact.

Youth is reluctant to marry. When it does, it is reluctant to produce children, but quick to divorce. When men and women live together, in wedlock or out the arrangement is often formalized as a "relationship." Sometimes this is defined in legal contracts, as though it were a deal for an exchange of ser-vices between parties who distrust each other.

These "relationships" are com-monly designed to provide the par-ties with escape clauses to be invoked when long-term human involvement produces its inevitable messiness. The distaste for the messiness of human relationships is not new, of course, it has always been a characteristic of one of the stock comic figures of American society, the crotchety bachelor,

What made the bachelor comic was his willful refusal to undertake life's interesting complications, the sterility of the life he deliberately chose because he was too timid to try the water. Nowadays, however, the bachelor is no longer the source of comic literature and film, but a figure of admiration whose example is celebrated as a happy adjust-ment to the exigencies of a meanzines recite happy tales of women who, having successfully skirted the perils of husbands and nest building, have found contented aochorage in private harbors alone with their TV sets, their books, their wine, their pietures, their telephones and their self-fulfillment.

This is a long remove from the day when settlers traveled heavy miles a few times a year to escape the loneliness of prairie solitude in quilting bees and harvest feasts. A long distance even from a not-sodistant time when Americans pulled out of one-horse towns and dusty backwaters and poured into New York seeking people, life, adventure, love and the messiness of human connections.

Nowadays. Americans come to New York to be alone, and the drift toward loneliness is nowhere better illustrated than in the changing sex-ual customs. A recent report in The New York Times tells of a spreading "asexuality" among New York-ers. Increasing numbers of persons. it states, are finding that abstinence from sex develops into atrophy of sexual appeate, which makes it quite easy for them to live contentedly without sex. Not long ago a man told me of a coman who went to an "asexual har" to pick up men because she could be sure there was no risk of any human involvement. I thought he was joking, but oow it seems en-tirely probable that "asexual bars" will sprout throughout the city to accommodate the growing demand for places where people who want to be alone can do so with people like themselves.

"Asexuality" was preceded by "solosexuality." a practice, heavily dependent upon machinery, which permitted people to subdue the natural instinct for human companion ship with the aid of mechanical devices and illustrated manuals on the art of being your own irresisti-

"Solosexuality" developed out of "omnisexuality," a product of im-proved contraceptive technology hich permitted people to satisfy the craving for human relationship almost as readily as the craving for involvement "Asexuality." however, opens the possibility of a society in which perfect loneliness can finally be achieved.

There is a rather elegant nursing home I visit from time to time. In a certain wing almost everyone is totally alone except, now and then, for the occasional visit of someone like myself, the small residue of long-forgotten, messy buman rela-tionships. Minds wander in the past here, coming to rest briefly in a moment in 1910 when a younger brother got a thrashing from his daddy, then lurching 40 years ahead to the moment of a son's marriage, a husband's death. Loneliness is almost absolute to the visitor, unable to cross into those dead worlds. Investigators around the United States are exploring its possible application to an astounding array of disorders

Biofeedback Takes Strides Into Medicine

By Leslie Bennetts

NEW YORK (NYT)-Hippies practiced it Fast-buck artists promoted it And in the beginning biofeedback had a dubious image inflated by hype and was lumped together by the media with everything from meditation and voga to est and biorhythms. It was viewed askance by the general public, and with particular suspicion by the medical profession.

But in the last two or three years, biofeedback has made considerable strides toward respectability as the medical community has learned more about its uses and its potential. It is now regarded as a legitimate field for study at least, and perhaps for a great deal more. In-vestigators around the United States are exploring its possible application to an astounding range of disorders, from hypertension and headache to heartheat ahnormaliues, feesl incontinence, epilepsy, stomach uleers, spasue colons, asthma, hyperkinesis and learning dis-abilities in children. Raynaud's disease and chronic anxiety. These and a host of other problems are being treated ex-perimentally through biofeed-back training which consists of teaching people to be more aware of, and then to control, a broad spectrum of bodily processes once considered involuntary. This kind of internal selfregulation is learned through the use of various biofeedback devices that measure muscle tension, skin temperature and other physiological conditions and relay that information to the sub-

The growing interest has en-larged the Bioleedback Society. of America, tripling its member-ship in the last few years; the current enrollment of 1,500 is growing especially rapidly among doctors.

Rapidly Changing

While some doctors still doubt the utility of biofeedback, advo-cates contend that lingering sus-picion merely reflects ignorance of new research in a rapidly changing field. Accordingly, for the last two years the American Medical Association has offered biofeedback workshops at annual meetings as part of its continuing physician education program. Even the cautious now temper their skepticism. "I don't think anybody felt it was hokum," said Dr. Richard Jones, director of the AMA's Division of Scientifie Activities. "We just have to wait until there's scien-tific proof that biofeedback actually accomplishes what it promises to accomplish. I think it's still considered experimen-

Some former critics have changed their minds completely. Less than three years ago. Barry Shmavonian, chief of medical psychology in the department of psychiatry at Temple University Medical School, was described in Clinical Psychiatry News as a "major investigator in the field" who was "highly critical of claims for biofeedback."

"Initially, I was," Shmavonian said recently. "But gradually I became more and more involved with patient populations, and the results are much more dramatie and meaningful than with test subjects. For example, we have migraioe headache patients who are still symptom-free after five years, and we've had phe-nomenal results with a group of people with Raynaud's disease. But I still have a great many objections to anyone opening shop downtown, huying a couple of instruments and going into busi-ness; biofeedback should be done in a medical center."

Word Association

Many physicians prefer to dis-cuss bioleedback in terms of duntary control of physiological processes." fearing that peo-ple still associate the word with the image of "some 18-year-old training bis grandmother to alpha-productive," said Dr. Joseph Brudny, director of the Sensory Feedback Unit at ICD Research and Rehabilitation Center in Manhatlan, Doctors at ICD and elsewhere are using the technique to get far more complex results than a temporary relaxation "high."
In their work in the rehabilitation of stroke victims and other brain-injured patients, therapists at ICD have found that biofeedback can succeed with patients once deemed hopeless.

Four years ago, when he was 16. Alan Seidler had a near-fatal car accident. When he emerged from his coma brain damage had left him with impaired motion on his left side.

Conventional rehabilitation treatments have not been able to restore oormal movement to Alan's spastic hand and lame leg. Through biofeedback, Alan Seidler is learning to use his crippled limbs again by re-educating his brain to perform old com-mands in new ways.

Three times a week, for an bour at a time, Alan sits in front of an electromyograph, a com-puter console with a video screen oo top, which is attached to his arm with a battery of wires. The EMG measures mus-cle tension and translates Alan's movements into a graph on the screen, comparing it with an accompanying diagram of normal motion. The instantaneous visual feedback provides Alan with constant information on how to change each movement, even as he is making it, to bring it closer to normal.

Another Area

The relief of both migraine and tensioo headaches is another area with promising results. "We've had a great oumber of patients who had no success with other forms of treatment. hut who solved their headache oblem with biofeedback," said Dr. Seymour Diamond, director of the Diamond Headache Clinie in Chicago. "That doesn't mean it's a panacea for all headache sufferers, but it's the answer for some.

We use temperature hiofeedback to teach people how to raise the temperature io their hands at the onset of a migraine attack." Diamond . explained. "We don't know exactly why it works, but we think that when the blood vessels dilate, the pressure on the surrounding nerve causes the pain." Redirecting the blood flow to the hands instead of the head, therefore, diminishes the pressure and may abort the migraine.

Another important area has been the related problem of con-trolling stress. Biofeedback is marvelously adapted to changing maladaptive stress patterns, said Dr. Thomas Budzynski, director of the Biofeedback Institute in Denver, which provides stress management courses for patients from housewives to harried business executives, in addition to treating headaches, insomnia, chronic muscle tension and even phobias.

One benefit of bioleedback training can be the reduction of drug use. In some cases, biofeedback may succeed where drugs have failed. Epileptics whose problem is so severe it cannot be adequately controlled through medication number between 500,000 and a million people io the United States, according to Dr. Barry Sterman, chief of oeuropsychology research at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Sepulveda, Calif. He and his colleagues have had considerable success using biofeedback training to belp normalize an epileptic's hrain waves, thereby reducion the incidence of

Stop the Stress

Dr. Ken Greenspan, director of the Laboratory and Center for Stress-Related Disorders at Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center, has focused on hiofeedback's application to cardiovascular problems, "treating patients who have arterial blockage throughout the body, and particularly in the legs," he said.

Bioleedback training teaches the patient both to "stop the stress reaction, and then to learn how to dilate the collateral blood vessels." Greenspan con-

The relevance of biofeedback is not limited to medicine; as more businesses explore its stress-reducing benefits for executives and doctors dream about teaching relaxation techniques to schoolchildren as a form of lifelong preventive medicine, such innovations as the University of Michigan's test-anxiety program are proving practical for college students.

Wary of faddish hype, however, experis caution that biolect-back is not to be regarded as a miracle cure. And many worry about over-the-counter devices sold to the unsupervised con-

For biofeedback is not a profession in and of itself, according to Dr. Elmer Green, director the Voluctary Controls Program at the Menninger Founda-tion in Topeka, Kan, which bolds weekly biofeedback workshops for professionals from around the country. It's a tool for all professions," be said, "The concept of self-reg-ulation, that it's possible to con-trol one's own physiology, has been an atomic bomb. Doctors didn't realize patients were capahle of participating in their own health so much. That's an im-portant part of medicine, and it's been ignored in the past. It's not going to be ignored in the future."

PEOPLE: Queen Brings a Halt To Runaway Horses

Shouting "whoa, whoa," Queen Elizabeth II grabbed the reins of four ruoaway horses dragging an overturned coach Saturday, and with the help of her husband, Prince Philip, brought them to a half. The incident happened during a horseshow in Windsor Great Park. The carriage, occupied by four troopers from the royal Household Cavalry Regiment, overturned while maneuvering around an obstacle on the course. All four troopers were thrown out but only one was slightly injured.
One of the troopers said that after the carriage overturned, the horses dragged it for several bundred yards. "Then I saw the Queen step forward to shout whoa" and take
